SPECIAL NOTICES

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF THE WOMEN'S TEMPERANCE CRUSADE.

BANGOR, April 1, 1876.

Mrs. President and Ladies of the Temperance Crusade:

As the second year of our associated action is closing, it finds our cause still blessed by the voice of approving conscience, by the harvest of souls uplifted, and by the clear-shining smile of Our Father. The laborers are an undiminished band, and to all who unselfishly seek the success of the work, laying aside every weight of ambition and of personal ends to be gained, the rewards are unfailing, and the disappointed hopes renew their life at Life's Fountain.

One of our enrolled number has, within the year, been called to come up higher—Mrs. J. S. Wheelwright, whose name was early on our list, and who, though seldom meeting with us, was a faithful and consistent advocate of our cause. One member has withdrawn, and four new ones have been added.

The close of our first winter's Relief Work having fallen within the present year of the Crusade, in April, 1875, a summary of its accomplishment is not out of place here. The sewing circle which was organized Jan. 26, 1875, held eleven weekly [...] To these most punctual scholars, you may teach—anything.

Our platform is often called "free," in distinction from that of the Reform Club, which forbids all advocacy of the Prohibitory Law. Ours should be free from all friendship for the drink-traffic, and free from the dictation of any other association; it should not be free for attacks upon prohibition, nor free from the restraints of charity and courtesy.

Our pledge of total abstinence from all alcoholic beverages is presented at all our meetings, and at those which the Reform Club hold on Sunday afternoons, and has received during the year four hundred and ninety-five signatures.

From some of the clergymen of our city we have received much assistance in our Wednesday meetings as well as on the platform of City Hall. Rev. Messrs. Brown and Boyd have held, in aid of our work, temperance prayer-meetings in their churches, by which we have been greatly helped as well as encouraged. At a temperance praise-meeting held by Rev. Mr. Fay in his own church Dec. 19, our organization was invited to take part, and proved it a time of real thanksgiving.

In August and September last, upon invitation of residents in the neighborhood of the Essex St. school-house, two mission meetings of a most interesting character were held there by the Crusade, assisted by a number of the reformed men. The residents responded to the efforts of their visitors, and welcomed them, not only with hospitable greeting, but with that best of cheer, a joining in the work. Many signed the pledge, and a society is now organized there, which holds regular meetings, and has exerted a great influence for good. Our President, with some others, has also visited the neighboring towns of Newport and Winterport, and been instrumental in organizing the women of those places into societies to labor for the same good cause.

The Crusade has held this year but one of those prayer-meetings in the jail, such as were last year so great a blessing to ourselves and to the inmates there. With the establishment of the work-shop our former opportunity was lost, and is only restored as that suspends operations. Our ministrations there have been warmly welcomed and often asked for, and we believe that in many of those lives the scattered seed will yet blossom into the fragrance and beauty [...]

[...] go from strength to strength, and that all the lost be found, we should remember that the first object to which we have pledged ourselves is not less a Christian and womanly duty than the second—we have "to remove temptation from the path of the weak," as well as "to lift the fallen and bring back the erring."

The passing of our second year has seemed to strengthen, not to weaken, the temperance sentiment of the community, and the citizens of Bangor are proving at every trial that our cause is the destined conqueror, let us but be faithful. Still as at first, public sentiment sustains us, and in turn is upheld by us. The strong moral support we have received, sometimes voluntary, and sometimes only extorted by our patient weapons of prayer and persuasion, now stands around us, a wall of defence whose foundation is the Everlasting Rock and whose only weakening can come from our failure to do our duty. The lines have fallen to us in pleasant places indeed.

Our widest and deepest work has been upon public sentiment, and there is still our hardest work to do, and our greatest harvest to be reaped. Of our earliest friends, many are faithful to the cause and generous still, and new encouragements continually meet all our efforts for the right, from the hands of strangers as well as from our own people.

As we work to purify the community from the worst foe to its moral health, we cannot fail to greet with grateful joy the courage and fidelity of one honest man who does not read his oath of office by the light of ambition or greed, but who does what in him lies to make his appointed vineyard first pure, then peaceable. May the day soon come when every magistrate shall fulfill his duties with the unswerving faithfulness of Sheriff Jerrard.

As I lay down the work of a Secretary, in which for two years I have served you to the best of my ability, I thank you for the forbearance you have shown to my shortcomings. I do not lay down one jot or tittle of my interest in the work of Temperance, but my strength is not equal to my will, and you will find another to better fill the niche. There is work enough to do in the cause, and more than enough independent of official cares, and none of us who have known the joy of reaping can sit idle in so white a harvest. The fields, the storehouses, the Great Husbandman all say to us—Work on.

OUR CANDIDATE.

FOR PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,

HON. JAMES G. BLAINE,

Republican National Convention, 1876.

A National Republican Convention for the nomination of candidates for President and Vice President of the United States will be held in the CITY OF CINCINNATI, on WEDNESDAY, THE FOURTEENTH DAY OF JUNE, 1876, at 12 o'clock noon, and will consist of delegates from each State equal to twice the number of Senators and Representatives in Congress, and of two delegates from each organized Territory and the District of Columbia. [illegible]

E. D. MORGAN, Chairman.
WM. E. CHANDLER, Secretary,
Republican National Committee.
Washington, January 13, 1876.

THE DANA VOTE

The Boston Journal's Washington special says: "The Senators have been much annoyed by pretended lists of the yea and nay vote on Mr. Dana's nomination which have come to Washington in print, and none of which even approached correctness. But they decline to remove the injunction of secrecy from the vote." The Tribune indulges in the folly of printing an edition of "black list" of Republican Senators alleged to have voted against confirmation, and heads the list with the name of Conkling, who is fully understood to have voted to sustain the President's appointment. "The men named by the Tribune are not likely to be influenced either way by the printing of their names in big type," [illegible] special to the Boston Journal on Thursday evening speaks as follows:

A long and somewhat prosy debate in the Senate this afternoon was delivered by Mr. Morrill of Vermont, who expressed his belief that the information transported in the mails should be circulated promptly and cheaply. He also declared his doubts as to the value of an article in the New York Tribune, which professed to give a very conspicuous type the names of certain Republican Senators as having voted against the confirmation of Mr. Dana. Mr. Morrill had this article read, and then dryly remarked:

"It is evident, Mr. President, that the reporter of the press was not present, but I think that the article is of sufficient value to entitle it to preservation, if not transportation."

Mr. Eaton of Connecticut wished to ask the Senator from Vermont if that article must be sent as third class or fourth class, or simply merchandise.

Mr. Hamlin added: "Mr. President, I think the reporter for that paper ought to be discovered, and ought to be dismissed by his employers for his inaccuracy."

This was a delicate Parliamentary repudiation by Senators Morrill and Hamlin of the [illegible] assertion that they voted against the confirmation of Mr. Dana. None of Mr. Dana's friends here who conversed with these Senators before the final action of the Senate, and who knew their views, ever entertained the idea that either of them voted against the nomination. There was no reason why they or Senator Sherman should have been stigmatized as having joined the solid Democratic vote under the leadership of Benjamin F. Butler, to reject the best diplomatic nomination the President has sent to the Senate for years.

Senator Conkling cannot be held accountable for the action of the committee, as he did not participate in it at all. Neither did he vote, as has been so positively asserted, with the Democrats in rejecting Mr. Dana's nomination. On the contrary, he voted with Anthony, Boutwell, Cragin, Dawes, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Howe, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Sherman, Wadleigh and other Republican Senators, in favor of Mr. Dana's confirmation.

CONNECTICUT.

(From the New York Times.)

The Democrats may call this a victory if they like, but it is a victory which warrants the expectation that Connecticut may be counted among the Republican States in November. On the side of the Republicans the canvass was of the most languid character, partly because the State Committee had not the funds to meet the ordinary expenses of a campaign, partly because the United States Senatorship introduced an element into the contest not favorable to Republican activity, and partly because the State offices filled Monday must be fought for again in November, with all the advantages of having greater issues at stake, both in regard to local and national affairs. The weather was execrable even for a Connecticut election, and when the mud on the road is knee-deep a large proportion of rural Republicans stay at home. And yet, in face of all possible disadvantages, including the confident expectations of a Democratic victory, the Republicans have succeeded in diminishing by more than two-thirds Ingersoll's majority of last Spring. There are from 55,000 to 60,000 Republican voters in Connecticut, and if they do not turn out in force in November next, it will be from the all, but impossible reason that the Cincinnati nominee should prove manifestly unworthy of the cause he represents. It is clear from the experience of Connecticut that Eastern Democrats will, in the Inflation vote, be confronted with an element far more difficult to deal with than the Prohibition vote has been found to be by the Republicans. Atwater polled more votes than Smith yesterday, and the strength of the former was mainly drawn from Ingersoll's supporters, just as obviously as that of the latter was drawn from Robinson's. The Prohibition vote is at least not an element of party discord in a Presidential campaign, while the Inflation vote in Connecticut and elsewhere will prove much more troublesome to the Democrats in November than it did yesterday.

The Second District Democratic Convention in Jersey City held Wednesday night, ended the next morning in a general row, in which P. J. Condon was kicked and beaten until he was insensible. He is likely to die. Timothy Coff is arrested for being Condon's chief assailant. Several others were very roughly handled.

SENATOR HAMLIN'S SPEECH.

The speech of Senator Hamlin on the bill to regulate the rate of postage on third-class mail matter, was listened to with great interest in the Senate on Wednesday afternoon, and is very highly spoken of on all hands. As his arguments were enforced by very important and interesting statistics of the workings of the Post Office Department, we await the arrival of the official report in the Record in order to publish his remarks correctly. The Boston Journal's special says:

Senator Hamlin's speech in the Senate this afternoon on postal affairs, commanded marked attention, as it was evident that he had carefully studied the question, which he presented in a strong, common sense point of view. He made no pretence to eloquence, and yet at times he was truly eloquent as he demonstrated that the postal system should not be a source of revenue nor of expense to the General Government. His criticisms on the metropolitan and the country press will be read with interest, and cannot fail to provoke comment.

The Boston Advertiser's correspondent writes:

Mr. Hamlin's speech in the Senate today on postal rates was listened to with unusual interest, and is much praised. The veteran Senator became somewhat excited in alluding to the charge that last year's amendment increasing the rate on third-class matter was made in the interest of express companies, declaring that it was a thief crying thief.

And the N. Y. Tribune, which feels the hard raps administered by the Senator to the metropolitan press, is still inclined to concede the strength of the speech, and says:

Senator Hamlin's speech on the Postal bill, concerning third-class mail matter, will repay perusal. The Senator is yet a little sore from the hard hits the newspapers gave about the mistake made in the act of last year. But he is very clear upon the point that the Post Office should be made self-sustaining, and he shows that a two-cent postage upon letters will be practicable whenever the practice of overburdening the mails with merchandise shall be prevented.

PETTIFOGGING.

(From the Providence Journal.)

The Secretary of the Treasury gave ample notice to the proper House committee of the necessity for an appropriation; that committee felt bound by the pledge of Randall that no deficiency bill should be brought in, to do nothing in the premises. As a result we see the Postmasters of the cities lighting their offices at their own expense, and the gas companies refusing to furnish gas at the risk of never being paid for it. This is pitiful. The nation has no business to be under obligation to its officials for performing their duty in violation of the spirit of the orders of superior authority, and it should not be dependent upon the charity of corporations whose business it is to make dividends for their stockholders and not to supply the material wants of Government at the risk of never being paid therefor. This is a sort of Democratic economy which will make no party capital. The people of the United States are in an economical mood, there is no doubt about that, but they see no wisdom in refusing to put a hoop on a barrel when thereby a barrel of molasses might be saved. There need be no haste in entering the old rags at the House of Representatives. When the session is over it will be found that, for the good accomplished, no more blatant and extravagant legislative body ever convened. To get the names of the members of Congress owning bonus stock, which would legitimately cost a few hundred dollars, it is spending tens of thousands. And the rest of its work it is doing in the same way.

THE CALAIS VICTORY

(From the Calais Advertiser.)

The result of Monday's election was a majority for Mr. Downes of 195 against 21 majority for Mr. Daren last year. He carried every ward in the city, which has not been done for some years, nor of a Democrat was elected. In Ward four, where both the candidates and F. N. Pike live, Downes had 158 votes to 70 for Sawyer — some life-long Democrats voting for the former, and thus effectually rebuking the authors of the slanderous charge against Mr. Downes.

The usually Democratic ward five gave Downes a majority of eight in the upper and seven in the lower district despite the personal presence and efforts of Mr. Pike at the Red Beach Polls.

Mr. W. T. King whom the Times has so freely denounced, led the workers in ward four, and that ward which went Democratic last fall, in Mr. King's absence, gave this year one of its heaviest Republican majorities, a result which satisfactorily answers the slurs and attacks of the Times upon Mr. King.

That paper warmly espoused the Democratic cause, Monday, and both its owner and editor devoted their personal efforts to defeat Mr. Downes in ward two, but were most decisively routed.

In ward three and the other wards the figures show that the Republican party is in better shape than for some time, and Monday's election was a clean sweep for the Republicans, furnishing the most complete refutation of the slanders against their candidate.

Most of those Republicans who have supported Mr. Pike for the last year or two are now fully in accord with their old party where they are heartily welcomed and rendered capital service.

Very few of them can swallow the full dose of Democracy which the Democratic Congress has administered.

Mr. Sawyer, the Democratic nominee, was away when nominated, and as he is not a Democrat he will hardly relish the position in which he has been placed.

The editor of the Concord (N. H.) Monitor has been taking a well-earned vacation since the election in that State and visited Washington for the first time since he returned from the front at the close of the war. He has written up his observations for his paper, and after mentioning the various candidates for the Presidency expresses this opinion:

"Looking over the field dispassionately, and estimating all the probabilities, we regard the chances of Mr. Blaine's nomination at Cincinnati as better at this writing than those of any other aspirant. Of course, new combinations are liable to arise, and, as we have already intimated, the contest among the partisans of the leading candidates may eventuate in the bringing forward of a new man as a compromise candidate; but we do not consider this contingency to be a near one."

The N. Y. Post's Washington special says "the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections are reported to be unanimously opposed to the House bill prohibiting representatives, senators and other officers from contributing money for election purposes. The Democratic senators are as much opposed to the principle involved as the Republicans, and the bill will be reported to the Senate adversely. It is asserted that under the provisions of the bill candidates for office cannot subscribe money to purchase newspapers for distribution among voters."

As three members of the Executive Council have again succeeded in defeating the appointment of Mr. Burleigh as Land Agent, the public will insist upon inquiring into the motives which have inspired this persistent opposition to an efficient officer. The public have no personal feelings in this matter, but when three members of the Council insist upon rejecting an appointment supported by the Governor and three other Councillors, curiosity becomes excited and the matter will not be put at rest by a vote.

POLITICAL AND PERSONAL.

The Richmond (Va.) State predicts that Mr. Jefferson Davis' history of the war will be out just in time to defeat the Democracy at the next election.

A correspondent of the New York Times refers to Mr. Blaine's great ability, and says "it would be his ambition to give the nation a splendid administration and he could do it."

Massachusetts threatens to make Mr. Dana a United States Senator if the Senate rejects him.—N. Y. Tribune.

We were not aware that the Bay State had expressed such intention. Does the Tribune refer to Mr. Massachusetts Bowles?

The Democratic newspapers congratulate the Post on "the trim appearance" of the rooster it brought out to crow over the Connecticut election. It strikes us that both the rooster and the Democratic majority in the nutmeg State have been trimmed almost too much for comfort.—Boston Traveller.

The melancholy mortality among Democratic Committee Clerks is notable. Four of them have now been removed for cause. The latest to be exposed is one Houghton, Clerk of the Military Committee, who is proved to have been a partner in an illicit distillery. He will be hoisted to-morrow. Evidence will soon be produced to show that a prominent officer of the House several years ago served a term in a State Prison for the crime of arson.—Washington Dispatch.

The New Haven Journal says that the currency men intend to organize clubs in all parts of Connecticut, and that they expect the vote at the election next Fall will show some big greenback figures in many other towns besides New Haven.

The Democratic press is unanimous in the conviction that Connecticut has settled the question of the Presidency in favor of its party. Perhaps so, but there are to the impartial eye several able-bodied obstacles in the way now, including the rag baby, the Hon. Ben Hill, the Hon. Sam. Randall, and the Republican party.—N. Y. Tribune.

In the suit of Frank Moulton against the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, the demurrer of the defendant has been sustained by Judge Dyckman, with leave to the plaintiff to amend his complaint within twenty days on payment of costs.

A correspondent of the Boston Journal says the Buffalo (N. Y.) Blaine Club has received letters of encouragement and sympathy from prominent Republicans in adjoining counties and "it is intended to have a volunteer delegation of 100 prominent Republicans from that part of Western New York go to Cincinnati to use their best endeavors to secure Blaine's nomination, and to urge the New York delegation to vote for him after giving Conkling a complimentary vote."

DEMOCRATIC STATESMANSHIP.

(From the Boston Traveller.)

The Post has a most ingenious defence of the Democrats who voted against Mr. Dana. It says:

"They assume the responsibility by simply maintaining their attitude of opposition and allowing the Republican majority to manage its own affairs."

It has been a popular theory that Senators are sent to Washington to attend to the "affairs" of the country, and that they are responsible for the manner in which they attend to it; but the Post takes the novel view of the case that Democratic Senators are elected only to maintain an "attitude of opposition" to "the Republican majority." They are not to vote for or against a nominee on their judgment of his merits, but to vote against him simply because he is a nominee of the President. We do not believe the Democratic Senators will thank the Post for the defence it volunteers.

The House has passed the Senate bill reducing the salary of President of the United States to $25,000 and it has gone to the President for his signature. The reduction does not affect Gen. Grant, as the salary cannot be changed during a President's term of office, but it will fix the compensation of his successor and we incline to believe that President Grant is plucky enough to veto it. The present salary is none too large for the head of the Government of over forty millions of people, and the masses have not asked for its reduction. To fix the compensation of the Chief Magistrate now at the sum furnished in the early years of the Government is in effect a serious reduction in value, and the people of this country are quite willing to afford their Presidents a liberal salary. We prefer to pay the officers of the Government for their services and to cut off the vast aggregate of rebel claims now pending in the Democratic House.

VULCANIZED RUBBER COATED PIPE

This pipe has two layers of pure rubber, both upon the outside and inside, each layer being vulcanized on. This coating is unaffected either by acids or salts, and does not rust, crack or peel, thus making it the most durable and perfect pipe in use for conducting water.

It has been used for years in many cities where it has been thoroughly tested, and has received the highest testimonials for its superiority over pipe coated or enamelled with other substances.

After a careful examination of its merits, it has been adopted by the

A Charge against Quartermaster General Meigs

Cowery of the N. Y. Herald declines to answer

Thomas B. Connery testified that he was in charge of the N. Y. Herald under Mr Bennett at the time the cypher despatch of February 10th was printed. [illegible] Witness declined to answer any question relating to the subject of that conversation without consent of Mr Bennett. The committee decided that witness should go to New York and consult with Mr Bennett and then return to Washington by Tuesday next.

Quarter Master General Meigs Emphatically Denies the Charge.

Quarter Master General Meigs testified that the statements of David Webster this forenoon to the effect that he sought an interest in his "Moth Exterminator" by any suggestion of any kind that could be tortured into such a suspicion is absolutely false. He never told Webster that the Government was swindled out of large sums because the process then in use was worthless. He never asked him what benefit the contract would be to him. He never asked him how much he would give him (the witness). He had always considered Webster, like many other inventors, as crazy on the subject of his preparation for exterminating moths.

Witness corroborated generally the other statements of Webster from the record, but pronounced his charges false in every particular—the creation of a very active and imaginative brain. During all this time Webster was walking around very much excited, leaning over the shoulders of members of the committee and propounding questions much, to the amusement of everybody present.

Witness was asked whether he was the means of the adoption of the Geo. W. Cowles & Co. process for exterminating moths. He replied he had opposed the adoption, even after a board of army officers had recommended its adoption, but finally yielded to the accumulation of testimonials in its favor. When asked by whose influence it had been kept in use he replied that Geo W Brega and Dennis Pratt were very active in the matter.

Witness said the Cowles process is not now in use because at the last session of Congress it was provided in the appropriation bill that no money should be paid for the use of any patent process for exterminating moths or preventing mildew. [illegible]

The protest is signed by Wm Ives Buddington, R. S. Storrs, Wm M. Taylor, Wm Hayes Ward, H. H. McFarland, B. N. Martin.

The expenditure of $257,000 over the appropriation for the extension and ornamental finishing and decorating of the room of the new Post Office in New York under the orders of ex-Supervising Architect Mullett is about to be investigated by the Clymer Committee.

The President has approved the act of Congress to supply the deficiency in appropriations for certain Indians, also an act to supply the deficiency in the appropriation for the manufacture of postal cards, also a joint resolution for the relief of the Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians.

The House Committee on Indian Affairs have unanimously instructed the chairman to notify Ralph Meeker that he must answer the question propounded by Mr Platt, or his testimony would be stricken from the record as trifling and frivolous.

Ex Governor Chas. S. Alden died yesterday morning at Princeton. He was Governor of New Jersey from 1860 to [illegible]

Alonzo F. Taggart, a freight brakeman on the Boston & Albany Railroad, committed suicide at Springfield, Mass., yesterday noon, by shooting himself after a protracted spree.

The evidence in the case of W. H. Ottaman charged with the larceny of a $47,000 package from the Treasury, has closed, and the case is being argued by the counsel for the Government. Treasurer New testified that the United States had sustained no loss by the robbery, the bonds of the Treasurer having been ample to indemnify it for the amount stolen.

A Cheyenne letter says the campaign of Gen. Crook against the Indians was without the results that should have occurred, because Gen. Reynolds failed to retain the 800 or 1000 captured ponies, as they were recaptured from him a day or two after, and also disobedience of orders in not securing the beef and meat which was in the Indian Camp.

A letter from Greenville, S. C., states that 33 of the illicit distillers recently captured in South Carolina were taken to Charleston on the 5th instant to be tried before Judge Bond in the U. S. Circuit Court. Besides, these there are over 100 more to be tried in August.

The order relieving Major Lewis Merrill from duty in connection with the International Exhibition of 1876 is revoked.

The report telegraphed last night from Washington by a number of correspondents that Secretary Bristow has determined to retire from the Cabinet is pronounced false by the Secretary himself.

James E. Tower, a Boston lawyer, has been found guilty of blackmailing, and his bail was increased to $5,000.

Mary Gleason died in a police cell at Providence, R. I., Thursday night, of exposure and intemperance.

The House Committee on Appropriations further considered the deficiency estimate yesterday. The estimate of $35,000 for the expenses of the Black Hills commission was disallowed. A large number of deficiencies asked for by the Indian Bureau were reported back to the House with the recommendation that they be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The three witnesses from Chicago who are to testify relative to the crooked whiskey business as carried on in New York have arrived and under direction of Attorney Bliss will go before the Grand Jury. The books of several whiskey firms in New York have been recently seized.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs has not yet decided whether they will admit further evidence as asked by Mr Schenck. [illegible]

CHURCH DIRECTORY.

About fifty of our citizens went to Orono last evening to attend the entertainment given by the Methodist society. The programme was an interesting one and the supper was pronounced excellent.

The wires of the Bangor and Castine Telegraph Co have recently been tapped at this city and Bucksport for the benefit of the railroad, so that there is now a telegraphic connection between the railroad offices in the two places.

In the case of Moses M. Hodsdon vs Matthew Lincoln and W. C. Spratt, which has been up in the Supreme Court for the past few days, the arguments were made last evening and the jury will be out this morning.

The [illegible] of Mr Andrews' [illegible] class for ladies closed yesterday P. M. [illegible]

Yesterday the weather was very dull and rain began to fall about nine o'clock in the evening. It rained up river during the afternoon.

The funeral services of the late Gen. C. K. Miller will be held at his former residence on Centre street, at half past ten this forenoon.

Workmen have begun to paint the walls of the offices in City Hall, in accordance with an order recently passed by the City Government.

Floral Lodge, I. O. of G. T., now has two hundred members, and additions are being made at every meeting. The lodge is in a most flourishing condition.

Two individuals indulged in a free fight in front of Norombega Hall yesterday afternoon. It came to a sudden close when officer Clifford made his appearance.

The citizens of Brewer indulged in a little celebration last night. Guns were fired and horns blown at about 10 o'clock. We do not know the occasion of the festivities.

The annual report of the Secretary of the Women's Crusade will be found on the first page this morning. A story entitled "After the Season" will be found on the fourth page.

THE WILLIS CASE

Boston Comments on the Affair. The Cause of Mr Willis' Eccentricities His mind affected by cruel treatment in a Rebel Prison. Hints at further Judicial Proceedings

[illegible]

In regard to his escape he was never able to understand how it was effected. It was done by a friend of his grandfather, Mr. Benj. Willis of Boston, who, a half century before in Europe, had done this South Carolina gentleman a valuable service. This man hearing that a Benjamin Willis was doomed to be hung, got access to his prison and, identifying him as the grandson of a friend, lent powerful aid to efforts on foot from his family. The result was his escape after long confinement.

This extraordinary case may reach an unpleasant prominence, which is to be deprecated. It got a little notoriety last week. We had the facts at the time of Mr. Willis' strange conduct in Boston, sometimes showing itself in odd exaltations, then by violence; indeed, in the cars on the way up from Bangor he needed constant care; at one time he seemed to be in a fit. The expression "wealthy" in some of the newspapers conveys a very wrong idea of the fact. Mr. W. is simply peculiarily independent, and money is not a prime moving matter on either side in the unhappy case. In justice to the wife, too, it is declared that she loses an annuity by marriage. The sisters, too, who began these proceedings at Portland, are in independent circumstances, and will [illegible] any condition of things, without regard to party consideration, which will restore an affectionate brother to his health. The decision of the Court, thus preliminary, it is to be hoped will promote an opportunity for the best influence toward the restoration of a worthy gentleman.

Police Court.

In the Police Court yesterday Francis J. Gallagher was tried as a common seller of intoxicating liquor. The case was continued until to-day. John Mahoney was fined $1 and costs for violating the city ordinances by firing a pistol in Pickering Square. Charles L. Jordan was convicted on four single sales of liquor and was fined $30 and costs on each, appealed. Z. L. Chase was arraigned for an assault in pushing an old man named James Derry. [illegible] denied the charge and alleged that the pushing was done by the other party. Chase was found guilty and fined $10 and costs. L. G. Howard was [illegible] warrant and discharged.

HYPOPHOSPHITES. An article called Fellows' Hypophosphites has been advertised in the Pioneer for several months, but we gave it little thought, except to collect the bill, until an instance of its remarkable effects came under our observation. A few years ago, symptoms of consumption exhibited themselves in the case of S—— K——, Jr., of Calais, who belongs to a family predisposed to the disease. His friends became alarmed at the progress of his malady, and, realizing the chances as against him, he began to take Fellows' Hypophosphites. Instead of growing worse his health improved, and he now weighs fifty pounds more than he did before he began to take the syrup. We saw him last week, the picture of health, tipping the scales at two hundred avoirdupois. We have no interest in recommending Hypophosphites, except to benefit the sick and afflicted.—Aroostook Pioneer. d&w1w apr1

DR. SCHENCK'S STANDARD REMEDIES.

The standard remedies for all diseases of the lungs are SCHENCK'S PULMONIC SYRUP, SCHENCK'S SEA WEED TONIC, and SCHENCK'S MANDRAKE PILLS, and if taken before the lungs are destroyed a speedy cure is effected.

To these three medicines Dr. J. H. Schenck, of Philadelphia, owes his unrivalled success in the treatment of pulmonary diseases.

The Pulmonic Syrup ripens the morbid matter in the lungs, nature throws it off by an easy expectoration, for when the phlegm or matter is ripe a slight cough will throw it off, the patient has rest and the lungs begin to heal.

To enable the Pulmonic Syrup to do this, Schenck's Mandrake Pills and Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic must be freely used to cleanse the stomach and liver. Schenck's Mandrake Pills act on the liver, removing all obstructions, relax the gall bladder, the bile starts freely, and the liver is soon relieved.

Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic is a gentle stimulant and alterative; the alkali of which it is composed, mixes with the food and prevents souring. It assists the digestion by toning up the stomach to a healthy condition, so that the food and the Pulmonic Syrup will make good blood; then the lungs heal, and the patient will surely get well if care is taken to prevent fresh cold.

All who wish to consult Dr. Schenck, either personally or by letter, can do so at his principal office, corner of SIXTH and ARCH STS., Philadelphia, every Monday.

Schenck's medicines are sold by all druggists throughout the country. mn1

Father knows when birdies rest
Safe within each downy nest,
Knows that when the stars are peeping

Sleep, my babie! lullaby!

AFTER THE SEASON

Yes, every one is gone.

A shade of sadness crossed Marian's face more deep than the tone of the words she had just repeated seemed to justify. For Aunt Abby had spoken them lightly, in her brisk, good-natured way, and without the slightest tinge of disappointment. "Rather late for Newport," she had said. "I suppose the season is over, and every one gone."

"Yes," Marian had repeated, with that tragical little accent and darkening of the brow, "Yes, every one is gone."

Hardly a minute passed, however, before she recovered her sharpness. Clouds never dwelt long on the sweet-complexioned face of Marian Sumner. "Yes, dear auntie," she said, "it is well you have come only to see us, for you will hardly see Newport. We can show you the ocean and the drives and the cottages, but the spirit of the place, the summer spirit is gone. You should have been here a fortnight ago; you would have found enjoyment."

"I shall find enjoyment now," said Aunt Abby, confidently. "And what magnificent weather!"

"The golden days," Marian said. She proposed a walk to one of the beaches. Aunt Abby excused herself, but cast towards the children a wishful glance, which Marian gladly interpreted.

"Come, Peachie and Madge," she called, "put on your wraps, and we'll have a walk to the bathing beach." At which delightful proposition two demure-looking little girls left their picture-book with a bound.

It is a wonder how beautiful a place can be after those who loved it leave it. Nature never seems to waste a moment in pining or repining. Not all summer long had the cliffs and the sea and the seaward lawns been so winningly caressingly, brilliantly lovely as now on this afternoon of the golden days when every one was gone.

The children with Marian for their guide, and Marian with a memory for her—a ghost-like memory that would not down—wandered across a cedar-shaded lawn, emerging near the rails. They passed a cluster of deserted summer cottages which with rigidly boarded windows, seemed to blink their eyes wantonly to their brave little gardens, still radiant with salvias and scarlet geraniums, and entered a winding path that, protected from the precipice by a rude balustrade, threaded the brink of a rocky bluff and led into the broad road fronting the bathing beach. Here they seated themselves upon a wayside bench, and the children gazed eagerly at a scene to them entirely strange.

"But not so calm," cried Madge. "I thought the waves would leap and tumble and dash themselves on the sand. I thought we should hear a roar like thunder."

"You must wait for a storm," said Marian.

"Do you have storms?" asked Madge, presently.

"Often," replied Marian, in reverie.

"No, not very," Cousin May," [illegible] Madge. "But the sea—I should like to see it making a tempest."

"You would love it in its play, too," said Marian. "You can hardly judge of that now, with the tide so low, and the beach covered with black sea-weeds, and not one of the gay people left who came here on warm bright days to take the sea airings and to bathe in the surf."

"What I want," said Peachie, "is to pick up shells." She drew a long bag from her pocket, and begged leave to go down upon the sands, where laborers were piling wide wagons with sea-weeds or yoking together oxen which were to carry the huge lumbering wain.

"You may go," said Marian, smiling at Peachie's forethought to smuggle in her pocket a bag as for once 'mid such a long bag for shells. Madge went too, not without some scorn for the trumpery quest of a grandchild of which she had expected a tremendous scene.

A step sounded along the walk that flanked the high-road to shore, and a gentleman approached Marian. She started slightly, as if in recognition, before she turned to look, and before he had spoken a word, or taken, as he did by her permission, a place at her side.

"And I thought you were gone."

"I have returned only for a day. I shall be gone to-morrow."

For more than an hour Marian sat upon the sea-side bench, and no other than this gentleman. They conversed in grave, low tones, occasionally broken by a little rippling laugh from Marian—a peculiarly sweet-toned merry little laugh. Once he said, "That sounds like old times."

The children remained on the beach below, Peachie filling her bag with rather dingy shells, and grieving whenever the sea-sun's dazzling yellow turned to brown, Madge chatting with the laborers, highly interested in the idea of old ocean sending up the yearly tribute to fertilize the land.

"To make the fields beautiful for itself, I suppose," she said to the rough-eyed sea-weed gatherer, "when it comes dashing close up to them some fine day."

"Time to go home!" Marian called at last to her cousins. The sun was sinking against the horizon in a thin bank of cloud; a faint rosy tint spread over the shining waters flashing the far sails, and making West Island gleam like a pink cameo upon the distant wave.

At the gateway of the cedar-shaded lawn Marian's friend left her. "I should like so much to see your mother again," he said, at departure. "Will she be at home this evening?—and would she receive me?"

"She would be glad to see you, I am quite sure," said Marian. Homeward she turned, as in a dream. Madge and Peachie talk vivaciously, quite content with an occasional answer, and the fond clasp given by May to each confiding hand. Children are the friends whose presence one chooses when the mind is willing to be lulled, but the heart of hearts cries out for solitude.

"A note has come for thee, Marian," said May's mother, who stood with Aunt Abby on the piazza to view the sunset. No wonder Clarke Hadley had said he should like to see that mother again; to look at her was to enjoy a picture, calm and delicate and home-lighted as one of Boughton's winter scenes. She had lived half a century, but there was not a wrinkle on her brow. She belonged to the régime of old Newport, and wore the Quakeress costume—the snowy cap and kerchief and the dove-colored robe.

"I think poor Willie is dying," she said, as she gave Marian a note requesting her to come at once to the friend who, as his mother wrote had "kept asking and asking for Marian Sumner from the moment that he felt he was hopelessly ill."

Marian lost no time in complying. "Thee will stay all night," Mrs. Sumner said; "and if I can be of help, I will take thy place at day."

In haste and sorrow, Marian had gone some distance on her way, before she remembered the promise of Clarke Hadley's evening call. Then in one instant his image filled her thoughts.

"Is it really true that I have been with him to-day? Is it something more than a dream that we walked together an hour all alone—once more alone? How can people say he has changed? To be sure, his hair is tinged with gray, but it curls upon his temples in exactly the same old way. His eyes, perhaps, are less bright; more studious, more grave. His manner—well, I could not expect his manner to be like old times to me. Once though, when I laughed—" Marian sighed. "Clarke Hadley," she said in her heart, "go out of my thoughts this day! You would spoil all the power, all the motive, of my life if I should be so weak as to let you stay."

Twilight was deepening as she turned from the avenue into the narrow streets of the primitive, quaint town. She lifted the knocker of one of those ancient doors that rise from the pavement, with windows on either side, so near the street and low one could whisper from them to the passer-by. Willie's mother opened the door. Her eyes were red with weeping. She seized the girl's hand and led her through a house shrouded in gloom to an up-stairs chamber large and dim, where upon a sofa, and supported by pillows, Willie lay. He would not allow himself to be undressed, and there was no bed in the room. He had been deluding himself—and his attendants humored the fevered fancy—that he should be strong enough to drive over and see Marian, if not this morning then this afternoon; if not to-day then to-morrow early.

He made a sign to her now to draw near, and Marian said, "I am to stay all night."

"Then I shall sleep," he murmured. "It's so many, many nights since I have slept and only sleep can make me well."

He had taken her hand; and now as his eyes sought her face, they filled with that expression which gave her ever such pitying pain—an expression of deathless passion, love as hopeless as it was unceasing. To his mother that look gave something more than pain, it gave positive anguish.

"She holds his heart, his life, in her hands," thought this mother, outwardly calm, inwardly in torment. Her guilty conscience repeated that dreadful word "Retribution!" "This retribution—bitter indeed!"

The calm effect of Marian's presence proved itself upon Willie. His tired frame lost its electric stretch, and yielded to the comfort of the pillows; the clasp of his hand relaxed, his eyes closed.

So he slept till near midnight, the two women watching. The Marian persuaded the mother to go into an anteroom and try to snatch a needed repose. "I will call if there is a change," she said.

From twelve to one in height,—what a silent hour to the watcher! And what sad thoughts do people have that keep silence!

Marian looked at that languid form, and thought how bright in manly vigor it was one year ago. She reviewed, in her conscientious way, her dealings with the kind and true but too ardent heart lavished unaccepted all upon her. She recalled one vivid remembrance of an hour upon the wave-dashed rocks at "Purgatory Steps"—scene of so many lovers' wildest vows—when Willie, reading aloud Bailey's "Gipsy Maud," changed suddenly from reading to confession, seized the words that belonged to himself, made the poem speak for him. Marian should be

"Queen of every face
That saw her, as she is the world's one face"
She made the fortune she foretold." He was the boy-lover.

"[illegible] ," he cried,
[illegible]

From that hour till now, Marian's most firm and devout effort had not served to swerve the sentiment, fatally deep-rooted, or to handle her lover's adaption of the poem beyond the verse

"[illegible] the heavens [illegible]
[illegible] me!
[illegible] heaven! I cried,
[illegible] thee!"

One good thing she had accomplished. Taking advantage of a hereditary predilection in Willie's family for the army, she had induced him to enter the national military school, and secured to that end the weight of influential friends. Two years had passed with honor to Willie, when an accident in the gymnasium unfitted him, but temporarily for study—an accident in itself slight, but causing a seclusion, an inaction, that his morbid state of mind could not brook. He sank into dejection and into the most dangerous sort of wasting fever. Changed nearly beyond recognition, he came home.

Marian thought of all this by the midnight as she gently watched. When her thoughts became too sad, she took up a book that lay upon a little side table beside a burning candle, and tried to read.

The book was a familiar favorite to her, The Lamplighter. She turned to the special pages whose sentiment outlives the story—to light the lamps for those upon whom darkness is falling. This idea accord d with Marian's mood, with Marian's motive in life.

While she was reading, and some time near two o'clock, she felt herself drawn from her book to outside influence. It seemed to her that a strange word had been whispered near her, and that the air of the room grew cold.

She glanced toward Willie. He lay in the same attitude slumber had assumed, but his eyes were open, they were fixed on her with a look entirely new—a watchful suspicious, almost malignant, glow—one degree more of intensity would have made the glow a glare.

He did not speak, and she withdrew her glance and turned over her book. She shuddered from head to foot; apprehension of a fearful possibility crossed her mind.

"Shall I call the mother?" was her next thought. No, the change was too sudden, too undefined. He lay there so still, she delayed; she awaited some more certain sign of the appalling ill she feared.

Vehemently the sign came. With a quickness that only one force, ordered or disordered, gives, Willie sprang from the sofa to the window, flung up the sash, and leaned upon the piazza roof.

Calmly, even slowly, but clearly, aloud, as her presence of mind arose to the occasion of absolute command, she called, "Willie wait! You have forgotten your ring."

He paused and looked back. The calm voice, the sympathetic yet imperious word, an old association of a ring entangled somewhere in his confused resolve arrested him. He hesitated, looked back, then again.

But she had reached him. Not hurriedly and with eyes averted, she had approached the window. She took his hand with a light touch, not with a grasp. Her soft action veiled her coercive will. An instant of overwhelming pity put her on support with the desperate phase of Willie's resolution. "Wait and I will find your ring."

He allowed himself to be led by her yielding warily, sullenly, like an offending animal that feels his masters reining hand or word. She led him to the sofa, smoothed his pillows, and he lay down, but his head swayed to and fro; there was that upon his lips that her eyes hated to see.

His mother, awakened, came to the doorway, and the moment that Willie caught a glimpse of her excited face, his fever took on its paroxysm. He rushed toward her as upon a foe; and when she fled, and the door closed upon her, he turned fiercely toward Marian. Ah! it was not Willie now!

Marian moved by her absorbing pity, was not afraid. She went to the poor maniac, and flung her arms about his neck, called him "dear, dear Willie," kissed his hot cheek. And so he received, poor boy, as a saving pittance, too late, the boon he would have died for.

Her touch, not recognized, was potent still, and saved him from frenzy for the moment. Once more she coaxed him to his pillow; and she knelt beside him murmuring endearing words, and soothing his forehead and hands with her cool fingertips.

The mother stole from her hiding-place, physicians were sent for, and it was in that interval of waiting that something that seemed to Marian strangely ill-timed was said to her by Willie's mother.

"Marian, have you seen Clarke Hadley?" asked this woman, in a voice still trembling with agitation. The link between maternal grief and that question her auditor never knew. "Have you seen him?"

"Yes."

"Do you know he has bought the R—— place?"

"No."

"He is coming back to Newport to live, Marian"—after a pause—"I think you ought to be told—Clarke Hadley was forced to believe, before he went abroad, that you were to marry him for his wealth; that your heart belonged to another. It was the scheme of a wicked woman. She used merciless arts. He was the victim of false proofs—proofs invented by falsehood. Do you hear me, Marian? do you understand?"

"Yes."

Never, in its nearest approach to courage, can a cowardly heart become brave. This was as near confession as Willie's guilty mother ever came. It did not save her from that which she called "retribution—bitter indeed."

For a brief time Willie remained quiet; but before the physicians came, all Marian's tact and force of will was tested; and other attendants to their utmost were tried. For a day and night after only the strength of strong men could hold him. Reason returned when the friend we call "enemy" came to Willie. His beloved Marian was beside him; her hand held his when he descended into the darkness; the image of his idol lay beneath the lids of his closed eyes—the last dear thing that earth held for him.

On the night of Willie's great danger, Marian had been calm and strong; but when day was breaking, and she came out into the open air to go home, she was no longer calm or strong. And at that instant, almost at the door-step in the lonely street in the lonely town—for was there any one else abroad at that hour?—she met Clake Hadley.

Why he came there, why he waited for her there, Fate alone knows. There he was, to give his strength when she needed it. They walked in silence to the avenue.

The first words he said to her were, "Marian, do you remember the days when we used to tell each other everything?"

"I remember," Marian answered; "and this morning, I know not why, I wish you would let me tell you everything again."

Before she had told him half her everything, he had seized her little hand that lay so tremulously on his arm, and pressed it to his lips, to his heart. "Marian, you are mine," his heart said; "forever and forever mine." His lips said, "Will you be mine?—once again mine?"

But Marian's words were: "My life is already promised. I have given myself as solemnly as I can to a new motive, for oh, dear friend, since we parted, and since I have been no longer through and through a happy girl, I have seen how much sorrow there is in life. I have determined to live as my dear mother lives—for others, to give some help, some happiness, if I possibly can."

And then he said, "Live for others, Marian, but live for them with me. Let me help you comfort and strengthen those who need. I too have had my serious thoughts about life in my dreary wanderings sweet little heart, since I parted from you. I have come to think that we have no right to seize happiness and keep it all to ourselves—no right to enter into our own heaven and shut out all the world, as we used to, in these dear old days."

"Those dear old days!" Those words he spoke again as they stood at sunrise on the seaward piazza of Marian's home, in the lovely autumn-touched scenery of memories to them. And not calm and not strong, Marian, trembling with the weight of her long night of watching—night heavy with darkness and dread and the cry of human woe—gave herself to the strength that he extended. It hardly seemed to her strange that he should take her in his arms, as a new day began and that his lips said to her, as his heart had said, "Mine—forever and forever, mine."

They were married—"after the season." They had missed their youth's all-joyous bloom; they had missed the radiant interchange of summer and midsummer. The pathetic calm of autumn was inclosing them around. But not "after the season" for all that is best and noblest and dearest in woman and man. Not after the season for those to whom the reflection of their wedded love is as the glory of the golden days.
